“Examining the past and envisioning the future”

Paul McBride, Tamagawa University

Foundations and aspirations for transformative teaching at CELF

Acknowledging needs for principled program conceptualization, planning, and development; broad educational perspectives; and associated equitable outcomes for students, the presenter will delineate historical developments at CELF, including growing consciousness of and capacity to transform language teaching practices to reflect ELF use, and increasing willingness to experiment with ELF-related pedagogy.

Blagoja (Bill) Dimoski, Tamagawa University

Communication strategies in ELF talk: Implications for ELF-aware pedagogy

The presenter will report on a Kakenhi project investigating beginning to pre-intermediate Japanese English learners' strategic capabilities during ELF interactions via Zoom. Results of post-interviews with the Japanese participants and their foreign interlocutors will be discussed and implications for ELF-aware pedagogy examined, including the significance of cultural affinity.

Laura Kusaka, Aichi University Junior College

Revisiting student narratives: Messages to take forward

After reviewing eight years of International English Education Research Group (IEERG) research activities, the presenter will focus on what she considers are the salient messages from student narratives collected over a period of five years and how they can inform future research and pedagogy.

Peter Lyons, Aichi University

Symposia reports: Multilingual instructor narratives

The presenter will report on the IEERG's symposia that have been held via Zoom over the last two years. A commentary will be given discussing key findings on personal struggles, successes, perceptions of multicultural / multilingual instructors, and how they can serve as an inspiration in and beyond the classroom.
